Education

January 2014 –April 2016

Leadership, Education and Development
Certificate Program (LEAD)

This two-year fellowship program is a nation-wide educational leadership development program administered through the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC). The LEAD program is designed to enhance knowledge, skills, values, and practical experiences in educational leadership, with a focus on academic medicine. During the program, differences between educational administration and educational leadership are explored, a solid foundation based in the predominant theoretical frameworks of educational leadership is developed, personal leadership style is enhanced, and leadership concepts and principles at the UF College of Pharmacy are applied.

January 2011 – May 2012

University of Florida College of Medicine Master Educator Fellowship

The Fellowship is a formal 18-month program designed to support the educational development of selected faculty who have been acknowledged for their superior teaching skills. Objectives for the program include understanding of educational theory, learning innovative educational curricula, and the culmination of the fellowship through an individual educational research project.

July 2007 - July 2008

AACP Leadership Fellowship

The program developed personal and interpersonal competencies for leadership, practical management responsibilities and administrative competencies of an academic pharmacy administrator, as well as leadership in the external arena of advocacy and the profession. The fellowship was supported by an ongoing informal program of mentoring and introduction to leadership roles with our College Dean. A collaborative group research project involving proficiency, confidence, and application of skills following teaching certificate programs was also completed.
